

For project one, I decided to create a website for a theoretical coffee shop I would like to own one day. Last semester as a final project, I came up with the idea of a Midnight Coffee shop, and designed a logo for it. However, I knew that I eventually wanted to develop a website for this logo, so when I saw that our first project was to create a three page website about anything, I immediately knew what I was going to do. While I have worked with HTML and CSS before, I did not have to upload anything to a server. In all honesty, uploading to the server and making sure that all the file paths were correct, were more difficult for me than the actual code. Once I understood how relative file paths worked, I was able to easily complete the project. That's not to say that I didn't have hiccups, as I did have to go back and check to make sure that everything would format correctly, I truly think that the biggest challenge I faced with this project was the file paths as I previously stated.

Going off of that, some new skills that I acquired while completing this project, was how to link images and stylesheets that are stored in separate folders to the same website. I also learned how to create a navigation link, something that I did not previously know how to do. When I first looked at the project,

I was a bit intimidated on how to set it up. However, once I went through the steps, I realized that it actually wasn't bad at all! In fact, I now feel more confident when it comes to setting up a website and creating a multi-page layout. One thing that I am really proud of in my project, is the fact that I was available to incorporate my own designs into the website. The logo and the menu are both designs that I created on Adobe Illustrator, and I am glad that I was finally able to see them in action. Something else that I am proud of on this project is that I really like the way that I did the color schemes and the fonts. I feel as if I was available to match the 'vibe' of the coffee shop through the fonts and colors that I used. In fact, because I had created this logo previously, I was able to use the same color scheme. Being able to see the colors that I had previously curated on a website allowed me to feel really accomplished because it felt like that this dream coffee shop that I created was actually coming to life. Overall, I really enjoyed this project, and I am glad that I now have these skills in my toolbox!
